

How to feed the world, protect forests, benefit communities and slow global warming

Better Maps, Clearer Land Rights, Stronger Accountability:

Producer countries recognize indigenous land rights, resolve competing land claims and reduce fraud, corruption and tax evasion. Policies shift agriculture toward sustainable intensification.

Protection of Vulnerable Communities:

Companies and governments ensure free, prior and informed consent, and support mechanisms for dispute resolution.

From Commitments to Implementation:

Contract terms require commodities that are free of deforestation and human rights violations.

Transparency and Traceability:

Communities, civil society and consumers link cell phones to satellite images, exposing bad actors and promoting government enforcement actions. Companies verify implementation of their commitments through independent third parties.

End Support for Illegality:

Consumer countries stop importing commodities tainted by illegal deforestation.
